Penguins from space: faecal stains reveal the location of emperor penguin colonies

Peter T. Foxwell* and Philip N. Trathan

ABSTRACT

Aim To map and assess the breeding distribution of emperor penguins (Aptenodytes forsteri) using remote sensing.

Location East Antarctica.

Methods Using Landsat ETM satellite images downloaded from the Copernicus Open Access Hub (Glovis), we detected faecal staining associated with their colony locations. Emperor penguin colonies exist in sites between May and December each year and the staining is visible on sea ice. This staining can therefore be used to map the penguin colonies. The whole continental coastline has been assessed.
